IDEAS.

Some men are so shortsighted that they will employ small potatoes for seed. They are the kind of men who do not believe in education.

Family expenses and annual subscriptions are like revolutions. They never go backwards.

If a good act benefits no one else, it benefits the doer.

FROM THE WIDE WORLD.

It is announced that the Japanese loan of $50,000,000 will be issued next week.

Sir Henry M. Stanley, the African explorer, died in London, England, of pleuro-pneumonia.

A transport conveying foreign military attaches to the scene of war has been wrecked near Shimoneseki.

It is stated that the Ministers of the Powers at Peking, China, are seeking to make the Chinese Government observe strict neutrality.

The Japanese fleet made another unsuccessful attempt to block the entrance to Port Arthur harbor. It is claimed at Tokio that a still later attempt was effective and that the harbor is "corked."

Port Arthur has been isolated by the landing of Japanese troops at Pitsewo and Port Adams. The railroad has been occupied and the telegraph lines cut. Viceroy Alexieff hurriedly departed with his staff. The Japanese forces are variously estimated at from 20,000 to 30,000. The Russian authorities say that Port Arthur is impregnable and is provisioned to stand a year's siege. The size of the garrison is not thought to exceed 10,000.

IN OUR OWN COUNTRY.

Harvard defeated Princeton in their tenth annual debate.

A hailstorm at Welsh, La., piled drifts of twelve inches against buildings. All the glass in a passenger train was broken.

The United States Canal Commission has assumed control of the Panama Canal route and of the property of the Panama Canal Company.

Secretary of the Treasury Shaw says the Panama canal payment will not cause any financial disturbance. The money will be paid out gradually.

The official announcement of the attendance at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition on April 30, the opening day, as made by President Francis, was 187,793.

The Government is to sow a large tract of land in the Yellowstone Park in alfalfa, for the purpose of feeding the park elk and other wild animals during the winter.

The body of Edward L. Wentz, the young Philadelphia millionaire who mysteriously disappeared last October from Big Stone Gap, Va., was found Sunday by a boy while out hunting crows on the mountain side.

COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY.

Freight trains collided on the bridge at Henderson, Ky., with disastrous results.

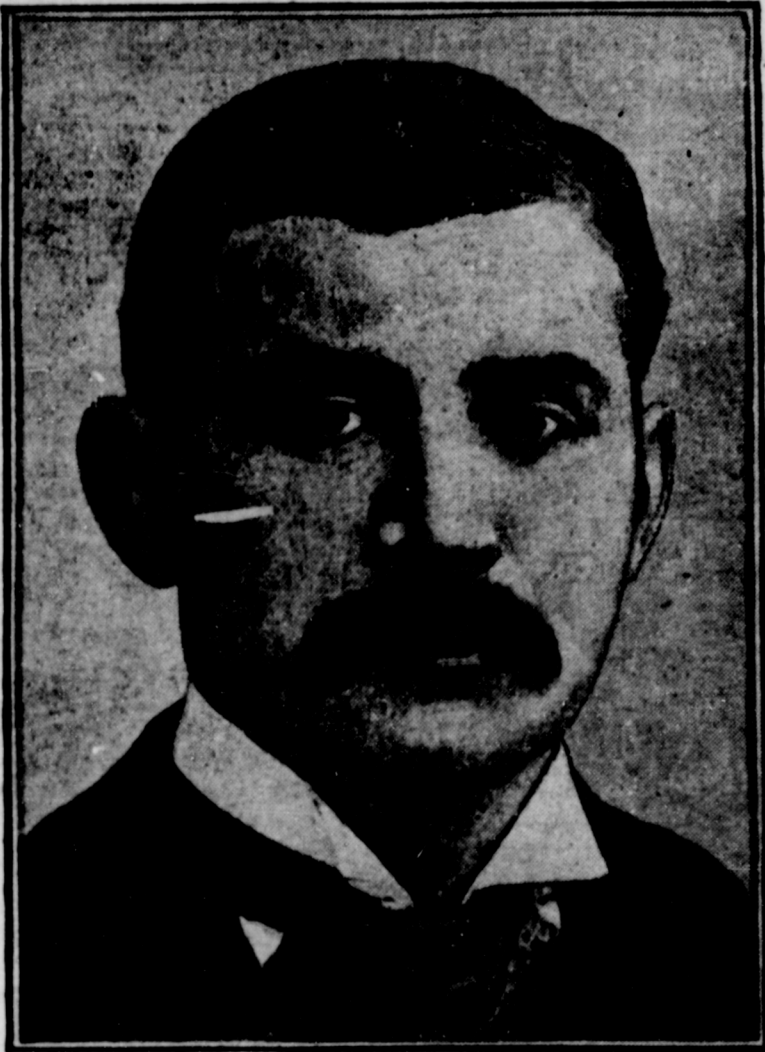

The annual convention of the Kentucky Society of Christian Endeavor was held at Glasgow.

The Democratic State Executive Committee at Lexington decided to call the State convention for Louisville June 8.

Col. and Mrs. George W. Blatterman, formerly of Maysville, Ky., were thrown from an automobile in St. Louis and severely injured.

The Kentucky delegates to the Republican National Convention met and elected John W. Yerkes National Committeeman from Kentucky.

The appeal from the Harrison Circuit Court sentencing Curtis Jett to life imprisonment for the murder of James B. Marcum was dismissed before the Court of Appeals and the prisoner will be taken to the penitentiary. He will now have to be pardoned before he can be executed for the murder of Cockrell.

J. PIERPONT MORGAN, JR., WHO MAY SUCCEED HIS FATHER.

The present visit of J. P. Morgan, Jr., to America, it is said, foreshadows the retirement of the elder Morgan. J. P. Morgan, Jr., who may succeed him at the head of Morgan affairs, is large and athletic and only thirty-seven years of age. His business training has been under way for years in the London banking house of his father.

DR. MAYO AN APOSTLE OF EDUCATION.

The Rev. Dr. A. D. Mayo has been paying Berea another extended visit, and new students and citizens who have recently come into the village will be interested in some account of this distinguished educator. More than twenty years ago Dr. Mayo left an important pastorate at the East to devote himself to the work of promoting general education throughout the Southern States. He had been active in public life for many years. In the early days of the Republican party he was associated with William H. Seward, of New York, and later won distinction in Ohio as an advocate of the Bible in the public schools.

When Dr. Mayo obeyed the inward call to the ministry of education in the South he obtained letters of introduction from Superintendents of instruction in nearly all the Northern States, and had already such an acquaintance in Washington that he secured the friendship of the leading senators and representatives from the South, Democrats as well as Republicans. Through these men he was introduced to the boards of education and superintendents of education throughout the South.

To the Southern States the education of all the people was a new idea and they had not men who were experienced in the methods suitable for popular education. Dr. Mayo went from city to city and from state to state, inspecting such schools as were already in existence and giving suggestions for their improvement and for the founding of new ones. He consulted members of the several state legislatures, governors of the states, mayors of cities, and worked in connection with different societies which were contributing to education in the South.

In these travels he first visited Berea before there was any railroad here, in the early years of President Fairchild's administration, and he has frequently come since to give general lectures to the Faculty, the advanced students, with some public addresses to citizens and the entire student body.

In later years his travels have been more restricted because of his advancing age and still more because of the important work he is doing in connection with the Bureau of Education at Washington. Dr. Harris, the head of this Bureau, has long employed Dr. Mayo to edit important publications to be issued by the government; and for some years he has been at work upon a history of common school education throughout the United States. This work is slowly being published by the United States Government and will consist of many volumes relating to the progress of the public schools in each and every state in the Union.

In this present visit Dr. Mayo has held numerous consultations with the President and members of the Faculty and given five important addresses: one on the educational outlook in Eastern Kentucky, at the banquet given to the County Superintendents; another on the consecrated spirit necessary for a teacher, at a platform meeting of the Superintendents Saturday night; a third to the entire body of students on Sunday night, giving an account of the great Christian merchant, Amos Lawrence; a fourth to the entire student body on Monday afternoon on the subject of Universal education; and a fifth to the Faculty and members of the College Convocation in the East Room at the Ladies Hall on Saturday night.

BIG BATTLE FOUGHT

The Russians Lost Heavily, Lieut. Gen. Sassulitch Being Reported Among Dead.

A BOMBARDMENT OF PORT ARTHUR

No Truth in the Report That the Vladivostok and Port Arthur Squadrons Effectuated a Junction.

A Complete Re-Establishment of Railroad and Telegraphic Communication With Port Arthur Brought About.

Paris, May 11.—The Matin's St. Petersburg correspondent says it is persistently rumored that there has been a big fight near Mao-Tien-Ling pass between the Russians and Gen. Kuroki's army. The Russians, he says, lost heavily, Lieut. Gen. Sassulitch being among the killed.

London, May 11.—The Tokio correspondent of the Morning Post, cabling under date of May 10, says that a high angle bombardment of Port Arthur is proceeding.

St. Petersburg, May 11.—An official investigation shows there is no truth in the report that the Vladivostok and Port Arthur squadrons have effected a junction after a naval battle in which both squadrons suffered losses.

St. Petersburg, May 11.—The most important official news from the front up to this hour is that telling of the complete re-establishment of railroad and telegraphic communication with Port Arthur, though how it was brought about and whether a battle was necessary to accomplish it are mysteries which Viceroy Alexieff failed to clear up.

The elation of the authorities, a natural consequence of this achievement, is sobered by official dispatches showing the activity of the Japanese in

OUR SERIAL

OPEN WINDOWS.

Like the lamp my windows open
Long about this time of year;
Like the sea the leaves a-driftin',
An' the way my soul's a-liftin';
An' the way my soul's a-liftin';
I can't hardly believe it's mine!
An' my feet are almost jigin',
An' the story of the sky's
Bort'ers got me goin', goin';
I could flop my wings an' fly!

I could almost flop my pinions,
With a glad ecstatic whoop,
An' just whirl up out the window,
An' go southward with a whoop!
An' perch somewhere, in some tree-top,
Where fall-tinted blossoms cling,
And just spread my face wide open
An' permit my soul to sing!

But they ain't no pinions on me,
An' I couldn't sing a note;
I let alone the song an' anthem,
That'd split a feller's throat;
But I can sing in my fancy
'Till the music seems to roll,
An' I do go swoopin' southward
On the pinions of my soul.

So I slam the windows open,
Every year about this time,
An' my old feet git ter jigin',
An' my heart's a glass o' wine!
An' my young soul goes a-wingin'
To an autumn tinted wood,
An' the skies are scarfed in splendor!
An' the world seems mighty good!

CHAPTER XXX. THE EMBASSY.

"Monsieur! Madame! Pierre Noir! Listen to me! I have saved you! I, Jean Breboeuf, I have rescued you!"

So spoke Jean Breboeuf, thrusting his head within the door of the lodge in which were the remaining prisoners of the Iroquois.

It was indeed Jean Breboeuf who, strolling beyond the outer edge of the village, had been among the first to spy an approaching party of visitors. Of any travelers possible, none could have been more important to the prisoners. Too late, yet welcome even now, the embassy from New France among the Iroquois had arrived. In an instant the village was in an uproar.

The leader of this embassy from Quebec was one Capt. Joncaire, at that time of the French settlements, but in former years a prisoner among the Onondagos, where he was adopted into the tribe and much respected. Joncaire was accompanied by a priest of the Jesuit brotherhood, by a young officer late of the regiment Carignan, and by two or three petty Canadian officials, as well as a struggling retinue of savages picked up on the way between Lake George and the Indian villages. He advanced now at the head of his little party, bearing in his hand a wampum belt. He pushed aside the young men, and demanded that he be brought to the chief of the village. Teganisoris himself presently advanced to meet him, and of him Joncaire demanded that there should at once be called a full council of the tribe; with which request the chief of the Onondagos hastened to comply.

Fully accustomed to such ceremonies, Joncaire sat in the council calmly listening to the speeches of its orators, and at length arose for his own reply. "Brothers," said he, "I have here—and he drew from his tunic a copy of the decree of Louis XIV. declaring peace between the French and the English colonies—a talking paper. This is the will of Onontio, whom you love and fear, and it is the will of the great father across the water, whom Onontio loves and fears. This talking paper says that our young men of the French colonies are no longer to go to war against Corlaer. The hatchet has been buried by the two great fathers. Brothers, I have come to tell you that it is time for the Iroquois also to bury the hatchet, and to place upon it heavy stones, so that it never again can be dug up.

"Brothers, as you know, the great canoes from across the sea are bringing more and more white men. Look about you, and tell me where are your fathers and your brothers and your sons? Half your fighting men are gone; and if you turn to the west to seek out strong young men from the other tribes, which of them will come to sit by your fires and be your brothers? The war trails of the nations have gone to the west as far as the Great River. All the country has been at war. The friends of Onontio beyond Michilimackinac have been so busy fighting that they have forgotten to take the beaver, or if they have taken it, they have been afraid to bring it down the water trail to us, lest the Iroquois or the English should rob them.

"Brothers, a great peace is now declared. Onontio, the father of all the red men, has taken the promises of his children, the Hurons, the Algonquins, the Miami, the Illini, the Outagamies, the Ojibways, all those peoples who live to the west, that they will follow the war trail no more. Next summer there will be a great council. Onontio and Corlaer have agreed to call the tribes to meet at the Mountain in the St. Lawrence. Onontio says to you that he will give you back your prisoners, and now he demands that you in return give back those whom you may have with you. This is his will; and if you fail him, you know how heavy is his hand.

"Brothers, I see that you have prisoners here, white prisoners. These must be given up to us. I will take them with me when I return. For your Indian captives, it is the will of Onontio that you bring them all to the Great Peace in the summer, and that you then, all of you, help to dig the great hill under which the hatchet is going to be buried. Then once more our rivers will not be red, and will look more like water. The sun will not shine red, but will look as the sun should look. The sky will again be blue. Our women and our children will no longer be afraid, and you Iroquois can go to sleep in your houses and not dread the arms of the French. Brothers, I have spoken. Peace is good."

Teganisoris replied in the same strain as that chosen by Joncaire, assuring him that he was his brother; that his heart went out to him; that the Iroquois loved the French; and that if they had gone to war with them, it was but because the young men of Corlaer had closed their eyes so that they could not see the truth. "As to these prisoners," said he, "take them with you. We do not want them with us, for we fear they may bring us harm. Our medicine man counseled us to offer up one of these prisoners as a sacrifice to the Great Spirit. We did so. Now our medicine man has a bad dream. He says that the white men are going to come and tear down our houses and trample our fields. When the time comes for the peace, the Iroquois will be at the Mountain. Brother, we will bury the hatchet, and bury it so deep that henceforth none may ever again dig it up."

"It is well," said Joncaire, abruptly. "My brothers are wise. Now let the council end, for my path is long and I must travel back to Onontio at once."

Joncaire knew well enough the fickle nature of these savages, who might the morrow demand another council and perhaps arrive at different conclusions. Hearing there were no white prisoners in the villages farther to the west, he resolved to set forth at once upon the return with those now at hand. Hurrying, therefore, as soon as might be, to their leader, he urged him to make ready forthwith for the journey back to the St. Lawrence.

"Unless I much mistake, monsieur," said he to Law, "you are that same gentleman who so set all Quebec by gone out, we shall see your friend Du Mesne as big as life at the Mountain next summer, knowing as much of your history as you yourself do, and quite counting upon meeting you with us on the St. Lawrence, and madame as well. As to that, methinks madame will be better with us on the St. Lawrence than on the savage Messasebe. We have none too many dames among us, and I need not state, what monsieur's eyes have told him every morning—that a fairer never set foot from ship from over seas. Witness my lieutenant yonder, Raoul de Ligny! He is thus soon all devotion! Mother of God! but we are well met here, in this wilderness, among the savages. Voila, monsieur! We take you again captive, and 'tis madame enslaves us all!"

There had indeed ensued conversation between the young French officer above named and Mary Conynge; yet prompt as might have been the former with gallant attentions to so fair a captive, it could not have been said that he was allowed the first advances. Mary Conynge, even after a month of starving foot travel and another month of anxiety at the Iroquois villages, had lost neither her rounded body, her brilliance of eye and color, nor her subtle magnetism of personality. It had taken stronger head than that of Raoul de Ligny to withstand even her slight request. How, then, as to Mary Conynge supplicating, entreating, craving of him protection?

"Ah, you brave Frenchmen!" said she to De Ligny, advancing to him as he stood apart, twisting his mustaches and not unkindly of this very possibility of a conversation with the captive. "You brave Frenchmen, how can we thank you for our salvation? It was all so horrible!"

"It is our duty to save all, madame," rejoined De Ligny; "our happiness unspeakable to save such as madame. I swear by my sword, I had as soon expected to find an angel with the Iroquois as to meet there madame! Quebec—all Quebec has told me who madame was and is. And I am your slave."

"Oh, sir, could you but mean that!" and there was turned upon him the full power of a gaze which few men had ever been able to withstand. The blood of De Ligny tingled as he bowed and replied.

"If madame could but demand one proof."

Mary Conynge stepped closer to him. "Hush!" she said. "Speak low! Do not let it seem that we are interested. Keep your own counsel. Can you do this?"

The eyes of the young officer gleamed. He was bold enough to respond. This temptress noted.

He nodded.

"You see that man—the tall one, John Law? Listen! It is from him I ask you to save me. Oh, sir, there is my captivity!"

"What! Your husband?"

"He is not my husband."

"Mais—a thousand pardons. The child—your pardon."

"Pish! 'Tis the child of an Indian woman."

"Oh! The blood again came to the young gallant's forehead.

"Listen, I tell you! I have been scarce better than a prisoner in the man's hands. He has abused me, threatened me, would have beaten me—"

"Madame—Mademoiselle!"

"'Tis true. We have been far in the west, and I could not escape. Good Providence has now brought my rescue—and you, monsieur! Oh! tell me that it has brought me safety, and also a friend—that it has brought me you!"

With every pulse a-tingle, every vein afire, what could the young gallant do? What but yield, but promise, but swear, but raise?

"Hush!" said Mary Conynge, her own eyes gleaming. "Wait! The time will come. So soon as we reach the settlements, I leave him, and forever! Then—!" Their hands met swiftly. "He has not spoken to me for weeks, other than words of 'Yes' or 'No.' 'Do this' or 'Do that!' Wait! Wait! How soon shall we be at Montreal?"

"Less than a month. 'Twill seem an age, I swear!"

"Madam," interrupted Law, "pardon, but Monsieur Joncaire bids us be ready. Come, help me arrange the packs for our journey. Perhaps Lieutenant de Ligny—for so I think they name you, sir—will pardon us, and will consent to resume his conversation later."

"Assuredly," said De Ligny. "I shall wait, monsieur."

"So, madam," said Law to Mary Conynge, as they at last found themselves alone in the lodge, arranging their few belongings for transport, "we are at last to regain the settlements, and for a time, at least, must forego our home in the farther west. In time—"

"Oh, in time! What mean you?"

"Why, we may return."

"Never! I have had my fill of savaging. That we are left alive is mighty merciful. To go thither again—never!"

"And if I go?"

"As you like."

"Meaning, madam?"

"What you like."

Law seated himself on the corded pack, bringing the tips of his fingers together.

"Then my late sweetheart has somewhat changed her fancy?"

"I have no fancy left. What I was once to you I shall not recall more than I can avoid in my own mind. As to what you heard from that lying man, Sir Arthur—"

"Listen! Stop! Neither must you insult the dead nor the absent. I have never told you what I learned from Sir Arthur though it was enough to set me well distraught."

"I doubt not that he told you 'twas I who befooled Lady Catharine; that 'twas I who took the letter which you sent—"

"Stay! No. He told me not so much as that. But he and you together have told me enough to know that I was the basest wretch on earth, the most guileful, the most unspeakably false and cruel. How could I have doubted the faith of Lady Catharine—how, but for you? Oh, Mary Conynge, Mary Conynge! Would God a man were so fashioned he might better withstand the argument of soft flesh and shining eyes! I admit, I believed the disloyal one, and doubted her who was loyalty itself."

"And you would go back into the wilderness with one who was as false as you say?"

"Never!" replied John Law, swiftly. "Tis as you yourself say. 'Tis all over. Hell itself hath followed me. Now let it all go, one with the other, little with big. I did not forget, nor should I though I tried it again. Back to Europe, back to the gaming tables, to the wheels and cards I go again, and plunge into it madder than ever did man before. Let us see if chance can bring John Law anything worse than what he has already known. But, madam, doubt not. So long as you claim my protection, here or anywhere on earth—in the west, in France, in England—it is yours; for I pay for my folly like a man, be assured of that. The child is ours, and it must be considered. But once let me find you in unfaithfulness—once let me know that you resign me—then John Law is free! I shall meantime see Catharine Kopolys again. I shall give her my heart in anguish, and I shall have her heart in return. And then, Mary Conynge, the cards, dice, perhaps drink—perhaps sold, and the end. Madam, remember! And now come!"

(To Be Continued.)

A VISIBLE ARGUMENT.

Defense of College Education Strengthened by an Impressive Object Lesson.

Some uneducated people are victims of the fallacy, says Youth's Companion, that because there are graduates of colleges who are unworthy of the position that has tried to do so much for them, therefore colleges are bad. The Rev. Thos. P. Hunt relates in his spirited autobiography an incident in which he corrected one man's prejudice.

"While I was acting as agent for Lafayette college I applied to a wealthy merchant for a donation, and also urged him to take a scholarship and have his sons educated. I found him so strongly confirmed in the opinion that a college education is but the road to worthlessness that I desisted from arguing with him.

"After dinner I proposed a walk. We made a thorough visit to the wharves, grogshops and hotels of the place.

"After supper I remarked, 'What a pity that so many of the worthless, idle nuisances we have seen in our walk to-day have spent their time and their father's money in colleges.'"

"Colleges!" said he. "Why, there is not a college boy among them! They are ignorant; their parents do not go to church nor read the Bible. Colleges indeed!"

"I had him. 'You see, then,' I said, 'that young men may be ruined without a college education. I admit that college boys may be ruined, not in consequence of education, but rather in spite of it. Statistics show that a smaller proportion of college students become worthless than of any other class of young men in the country.'"

A ROYAL FROST.

Young Midshipman's Story Pleased the Gay Company, but Not the Good Queen.

Queen Victoria, although not particularly fond of the sea, was very proud of her navy and showed much attention and kindness (especially when resident in the Isle of Wight) to naval officers. Admirals and captains were often invited to her table, and junior officers were asked to entertainments and evening parties at Osborne, says London M. A. P. A certain midshipman (now a popular "first luff") was once present on one of these festive occasions, and the queen, seated in her accustomed low, easy chair in another part of the drawing room, observed the young officer in the middle of a group of court ladies, who appeared to be greatly enjoying some story with which he was entertaining them.

The queen, who was in conversation with her minister in attendance, promptly desired him to request the young midshipman to come over and repeat for her delectation the anecdote which had afforded so much diversion to her ladies. The unfortunate youth obeyed the royal behest with much inward perturbation, for the chief point of the story which he now found himself called to recount to the ear of his majesty happened to lie in the fact of his having once succeeded in making a fool of his superior officer. As the tale progressed the royal countenance was overspread, not with smiles, but with gathering frowns, and when it came to a halting conclusion the only comment was the cutting remark, "We are not in the least amused."

Her Money's Worth.

When Mrs. Siddons was acting in the "Grecian Daughter" her part was one night taken by an understudy. But the character of Isabella was a moving one, and an Irish lady present was almost hysterically affected by it.

"It is fortunate Mrs. Siddons is not acting to-night," said the gentleman beside her. "If this moves you so much, you would hardly be able to bear that at all."

"Mrs. Siddons not playing!" cried the weeping lady. "I thought she was. I never should have cried if I hadn't!"

Cured His Mother of Rheumatism.

"My mother has been a sufferer for many years with rheumatism," says W. H. Howard, of Husband, Pa. "At times she was unable to move at all, while at all times walking was painful. I presented her with a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and after a few applications she decided it was the most wonderful pain reliever she had ever tried, in fact, she is never without it now and is at all times able to walk. An occasional application of Pain Balm keeps away the pain that she was formerly troubled with."

CHILD STUDY.

By Helen M. Winston, in Union Gospel News.

Think more of the child's diet and less of abusing his stomach, and there will be better children. Give the child good, plain food and plenty of it (beans, by the way, form an almost perfect diet), at least two hours' recreation in the fresh air, and put him to bed early; nutrition must exceed waste, therefore the necessity for good food; also, sleep is a great repairer of waste.

Keep the child clean physically and morally. Instill into the small mind a reverence for the Creator; teach him that he is but a tiny part of the universe, and that every wrong act will bring its consequent punishment. Teach him to reverence his body, and when he asks questions answer them honestly. Live with him, grow with him, love him and you will have no thought of corporal punishment.

Fill the home with good literature, good language, and good music—the last not only "has its charms," but it positively drives out evil! The parents should work in harmony with the teacher and strengthen her influence.

TO TRUSTEES.

At a number of teachers' institutes in Eastern Kentucky last year a change in the present trustee system was advocated. A proposed plan was that each county should elect or appoint a commission of five men, with qualifications similar to those of county Supt., who were to co-operate with him; thus doing away with the district trustees.

On the other hand it was argued that such a radical change was opposed to the principles of free government, and that such a concentration of power would tend to breed corruption.

The idea generally prevailed that it was safer to trust this important part of the machinery of school government to the district trustees. It is enough to say that the people still believe in your manhood and are willing to trust you.

Now, as trustees, you have an opportunity to show to the county, state and nation that you believe in the advancement of the public schools; in the enlightenment of the people and national prosperity; for much of the good that comes to the nation must have its origin in the school.

You are aware that in taking the oath of office you solemnly pledge yourself to faithfully and earnestly guard the educational interests of your district. You are also aware that this oath is as binding as the oath the juror takes to render a verdict of truth, or the oath the president takes to support the constitution of the land. The law clothes you with the authority and devolves it on you as a duty to secure the services of the best teacher attainable for your district.

There is no provision in the law that says the teacher shall or shall not belong to your religious denomination or affiliate with the political party of your choice or by kindred ties be related to your or your wife's people. But the law does say that the teacher shall be of upright moral character, and with the highest intellectual qualifications that it is possible for you to secure, and I would like to add with natural qualification that fit him for your particular district.

When a teacher is employed and assumes the duties of that office, he stands in the place of the parents; so it is easily seen that the teacher wields a mighty influence over the lives of his pupils either for good or bad, hence the great importance of having the right teacher in the right place. I am willing to admit that it is not always easy determining who the right teacher is, but let us be cautious.

If you were to hire a man to labor on your farm this summer, would you not try to get the best farm laborer that is in the country (if you could get him for the same price) would you not want him to be honest and trustworthy? And suppose you should lose your health or fortune and should be compelled to bind your children out. Would you not consider deeply and earnestly the character of the household and the conditions of the home into which your children are to go?

When you employ a teacher you are morally bound to patronize him. You intrust not only the plastic minds of your children to his teachings, but the children of the entire district. The kind of teachers you employ in this generation will largely determine the character of the generation that shall follow.

Do the best you can for your district, visit the schools, encourage and inspire teacher and pupil and let this be the crowning year for the district schools of Eastern Kentucky.

IN THE SOUTHWEST.

Matters of Interest to Farmers, Cotton Growers and Live Stock Men.

Irrigation is as essential as a fertilizer in many sections of the southwest, and the one needs to be studied as much as the other. The water problem has been solved by many stock farmers of the southwest by the boring of artesian wells.

A colony of Japanese have purchased 1,000 acres of rice land near League City, Tex. They will plant seed rice from Japan, having brought twenty tons of fine seed with them to this country. The Japs are practical rice farmers in their own country and will doubtless make a success of the business in America.

The cotton planter who pastured his cotton fields early in the fall and thrashed and burned all the trash in his fields has just that much advantage in the boll weevil fight over the farmer who has neglected to do this.

Congress has appropriated $250,000 to be used to control the ravages of the boll weevil. The money is to be expended under the direction of the agricultural department and is available immediately.

Professor S. A. Knapp has been ordered by Secretary of Agriculture Wilson to report at Washington for the purpose of assisting to prepare plans for the immediate expenditure of the appropriation made by congress to fight the boll weevil.

The southwest was well represented at the meeting of the National Live Stock association and the National Woolgrowers' association at Portland, Ore. The woolgrowers adopted a change in the method of handling wool so that the producer may deal directly with the manufacturer.

In the event of war in the far east there will be an increase in the price of beef cattle. Meat maintains an army in the field better than any other ration when accompanied by wholesome bread, and no country understands this better than the powers which threaten hostilities—Russia and Japan.

Farmers of Texas are paying more attention to the breeding of draft horses since the price of cattle declined. They are extensively used in every community and sell readily for cash. Wagons must be pulled in all kinds of weather and over roads which do not always class as good, and for this and other reasons the everyday horse continues to be in demand.—Texas Farm and Ranch.

Railway Construction in the South.
Oklahoma territory shows the greatest increase in railroad mileage, having 653 miles to her credit. Louisiana is second, with 446 miles, Texas third, with 370 miles, and Indian Territory fourth, with 319 miles. The total increase in these four states and territories, which, taken together, form an unbroken region tributary to the gulf of Mexico, amounts to nearly one-third of the total increase of the country, according to statistics of the Railway Age.

Eastern Manchuria. Kuang-Gu-Sian (Huang-Tiang Sai?), 50 miles north-east of Feng Wang Cheng, was occupied by the Japanese May 5. This enables an advance along the bad roads to the flank either at Liao Yang or Mukden. The territory between the main road to Feng Wang Cheng and the river Tayang has been penetrated by such a strong force of Japanese as to lead to the suggestion that another army has landed at Takushan, of which the outside world has not before heard.

The activity of the Japanese, however, has not diminished the satisfaction felt at the opening of communication with Port Arthur.

London, May 11.—The Chronicle's correspondent at Shan-Hai-Kwan, under date of May 10, says that the Japanese first army from the Yalu river already is threatening the Russian position at Hai-Cheng. The second army, marching in three divisions in order to co-operate with Gen. Kuroki, has defeated the Russians near Wafung-Tien with great loss, the correspondent says. He adds that the Japanese artillery was splendidly handled.

The Chronicle's Tokyo correspondent declares that Port Arthur will be bombarded with heavy guns and that a concentrated assault will be made on a well-known vulnerable point in the defense.

SUBMARINE BOATS.

Four Are to Be Built in This Country For Japanese Navy.

Newport News, Va., May 11.—From a reliable source comes the information that a contract has just been awarded the Newport News Shipbuilding Co. for the construction of four lake submarine boats destined for service with the Japanese navy in the war in the far east. Shipyard officials here refuse to confirm or deny the report, but it is believed here that the yard has been rushing work in warships contracted for in an indirect way for the mikado's government for some time past.

Ship Sold to the Russians.

Berlin, May 11.—A special dispatch from Hamburg says that the Hamburg-American Steamship Co. has sold to the Russian government the trans-Atlantic liner Augusta Victoria, and that negotiations are proceeding for the purchase of the Pretoria.

The Contract Awarded.

Annapolis, Md., May 11.—The navy department has awarded the contract for the erection of the new academic building at the naval academy to the John Pierce Co., of New York, their bid for the work having been the lowest received.

Will Attempt to Reach Port Arthur.

Paris, May 11.—A St. Petersburg correspondent says: Vice Adm. Skrydloff and Vice Adm. Bezobrazoff have been notified of the resumption of communication with Port Arthur; that they may attempt to reach that place.

Entrance to Port Arthur Free.

Paris, May 11.—According to the St. Petersburg correspondent of the Matin a high officer of the naval general staff declares that the entrance to Port Arthur is still free and that the squadron went out on May 9 as far as Pitsewo.

The Capture of Feng Wang Cheng.

London, May 11.—The correspondent of the Times at Tokio says it appears that the capture of Feng-Wang Chang was effected not by the troops who fought on the Yalu but by a mixed brigade under Maj. Gen. Sasaki.

JURY SECURED.

The Rising Sun Murder Trial is Fairly Begun.

Rising Sun, Ind., May 11.—In the Gillespie case the work of securing a jury was resumed at 9 o'clock Tuesday morning. The first pre-emptory challenge by the state excused James Hulbert, a farmer.

Juryman George Hanna said that he had answered a question Monday which he did not understand. He said he would not vote to hang a woman. He was excused.

A jury was finally secured, as follows: Albert Patey, farmer; David Bailey, farmer; David H. Gibson, farmer; George Reiman, farmer; W. J. Powell, farmer; Hugh French, farmer; W. J. Spalding, farmer; H. W. Neuman, farmer; Sherman Clark, mechanic; W. O. Powell, retired farmer; Henry Kurr, shoe dealer; Wade H. Rodgers, farmer.

Both sides professed to be satisfied with the jurors selected, but the right remaining to challenge it can not be counted as the jury as it stands until sworn in.

THE FERRIS WHEEL.

Bar of Iron Fell From the Top, Killing a Laborer.

St. Louis, May 11.—A bar of iron fell from the top of the Ferris wheel at the World's fair Tuesday, striking a laborer on the head and killing him instantly. Dr. Edward Lewis responded from the Emergency hospital in an ambulance and upon arriving found the laborer dead, and refused to take the body to the hospital, suggesting that the morgue wagon be called. This angered the dead laborer's 100 fellow workmen, who insisted that the body should be taken in the ambulance. Dr. Lewis was knocked down, beaten and kicked by the crowd till it became necessary for him to be taken away as a patient in his own ambulance.

Mental and Manual Servitude

By DR. HOWARD A. GIBBS, M. D.

THE joy of work under the conditions which surround the working class today is an impossibility, and to hold it up as an ideal or as a duty is a hollow mockery.

It is generally conceded that mental work presupposes a higher degree of development than manual work, but this is not the real basis of the insidious distinction which is usually drawn between them. The distinction in its final analysis is a purely economic one. Manual work has become a badge of servitude, and in fact lies the basis of the distinction. Perhaps no class has been more ready to draw this distinction than the intellectual workers themselves. The aristocracy of brute force and the aristocracy of birth is disappearing, but the so-called aristocracy of brains still remains.

In the development of our industrial system and the degradation of the mental worker through it, this aristocracy is bound to disappear. This process is already taking place. The most degraded slaves of ancient Rome were her intellectual slaves, more degraded from the very fact that they prostituted higher powers and possibilities. The editor, whose pen is directed from the counting room; the college professor, who must perforce explain and defend the capitalist system which gives him his salary; the clergyman, who preaches pointless platitudes to plutocratic pews—these are some of the types of our modern intellectual slaves. The fact that they are often utterly unconscious of their servitude and lay the flattering unction to their souls that they are several degrees above the manual laborer in point of freedom—all this only reveals the depth of their degradation.

The growing realization of this condition by the mental workers is tending to break down the barriers of distinction, and the emancipation of both manual and mental workers, through the social ownership of the tools of production, will do away with it forever. Then social usefulness alone will determine the dignity of labor, and labor time alone will determine its reward, whether it be manual or mental.

Howard A. Gibbs, M.D.

"Right Makes Might"

By REV. JENKIN LLOYD JONES,
Pastor All Souls Church, Chicago.

Right makes might. History is simply a verification of it. What has become of the great powers, the mighty cities, the dreaded conquerors that you read of in your books? They were mighty; they were populous; they were rich; they were terrible. The names of the far-off merchants, presidents and mayors, the bankers and manufacturers are lost and their work is forgotten, save a few antiques, broken relics, scattered fragments that are left us to tell us how the mighty have fallen. They had not the right of the might.

Over against the names that are remembered only in pity and in disgrace put the name of a far-off prince who renounced the glory of a court, became a beggar for truth's sake, and who suggests the devotions and graces, the aspirations and the ideals of five hundred and more million of men, for it is the name of the Buddha, pitiful, he who taught men to be kind, merciful and forgiving.

Over against the name of Alexander, who made the name of Macedonia terrible, write the name of Socrates, who walked barefoot in the snow as a private soldier in the Grecian army. His father was a stone-cutter; his mother was a nurse. He spent his time in talking with the youths in the market place; he was put to death because of his impiety. But his impiety represented his love for truth, his devotion to right, and after 24 centuries his name is the greatest name in Greece. His was the might of the right.

The bible of Christendom contains in the main the words of humble men, but they spoke the truth and their words survive pyramids and overlay dynasties. Jeremiah in exile, Paul in prison, Jesus on the cross—these represent the mighty ones of history, and their might lay in the right which they championed.

Opportunities of the Stage

By HENRIETTA CROSSMAN,
Playing Star Part in "Sweet Kitty Bellairs."

THE opportunities offered to a young woman in the dramatic profession are more, I think, than in any other. There is always room at the top, and I presume that every young woman who goes on the stage has an ambition to become a star. To a young woman who has talent, and that is not difficult to discover, my advice would be to adopt the profession of the stage.

When one looks at the myriad of young girls who are working in stores, offices, and other places, earning a mere pittance and with no opportunity of advancement beyond a certain limit, one cannot help but see the advantage of the stage as a profession if the applicant is suited in temperament, constitution, and all else, for her work. The stage is like all other arts. Because there is always room at the top one does not have to wait for a vacancy in the ranks for advancement. For painters, writers, singers, and actors advancement comes to those who are deserving, and this does not hinge upon the will of some petty employer. Even if the dramatic schools are grinding out actors by the dozens to-day, I would not discourage anyone whom I thought had ability to enter the profession. Good actors are scarce enough, and the stage will not be hurt by the addition of a number of bad actors if a few good actors can be given to it.

To a girl who loves her work and realizes its seriousness, I would say, by all means, go ahead. But to the young woman who looks upon the stage as a sort of frolic through life and an easy way of gaining the admiration that she craves, I should say keep away from it. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred success on the stage is the result of hard work. In no profession, business, or calling is the work so hard or trying, and the young person who contemplates making a step in this profession should realize that she is about to enter a profession in which the hardships, disappointments, work, and triumphs—if they should finally come—are greater than in any other walk of life I can recall.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Jesus has so far (vs. 1-11) illustrated from things lost; now it is a person, a son, and it is a father's heart that bleeds for him. In this, the greatest of all parables, Jesus comes back to His own illustration of the relation between God and man, and pictures it in the simplest and most beautiful and most winning way possible. Most of us are not and need not be theologians in the ordinary sense, but we may all master the theology of the parable of the Prodigal Son, and with that we have the essence of the theology of Jesus. There are several varieties of theology to be found in the 66 books that we call the Bible, but whether they took shape before the birth of Jesus, or after His death, they must square with His own teaching with regard to God and man and salvation or we cannot accept them for ourselves.

"A certain man had two sons." The whole point of the parable is in the relationship, father and son. "The younger of them." He was inexperienced and headstrong. It is the old story of a boy with a hankering, in itself natural and right, to see the world and a broader life than that of the home of his childhood; he supposed he knew the world—had probably bragged of it; distance had lent enchantment and he was wild to enter its varied and fascinating life. "The portion of thy substance that falleth to me." One-third of the property would be the "portion" of the younger son; two-thirds that of the elder. A boy's desire to realize the freedom and activities of manhood becomes wrong the moment it forgets to have consideration for the rights and feelings of others, and the restraints existing because of his relationship to home or society or God. "He divided unto them his living." Not because he had to; not because he was convinced that his boy would use the money wisely; but perhaps because he saw that a time had come in the boy's life when he must be thrown on his own responsibility. Men are creatures of free will, and this boy was become a man. "Took his journey into a far country." He wanted to get away from all who had ever seen or known him, from the restraint that their presence would be to him. "Riotous living." Perhaps he had meant only to see it; perhaps "seeing life" to him meant seeing low, immoral, abnormal life, as it does to so many; perhaps he thought he could play with fire and not be burned, or perhaps it was a case of the candle and the moth—the life of gay revelry had an almost irresistible attraction for him, and he flew to it the moment he was free.

"When he had spent all." That he spent all indicates the sheer madness of his course. He ignored almost every consideration that should influence a young man beginning life. "There arose a mighty famine." The "famine" usually comes to the one who has thrown away his opportunities. It is neither good economy nor good morals to learn wisdom only from the bitter experiences of foolishness and sin. This young man had not sense enough to learn it in any other way. He did not begin to see the point till he was "in want." Then, when the terrible of his mistake came to him, what did he do? Did he say: "I will arise and go to my father?" Did he admit that he had been wrong and go back? Not yet. It is hard to do that. He became a swineherd. "Husks." The nutritious pods of the carob tree; somewhat like locust pods. The last resort of starving Syrians even to-day.

"When he came to himself." One of the most significant sentences in the whole parable: Jesus did not assume that man is naturally depraved—a child of wrath, but the reverse. The far country, with its drunkenness and misery, he is in to be sure, but it is not his home and that life is not his life. It is unnatural, abnormal and insane. When the prodigal came to his senses, to himself, his real self, he realized it, too—that though he was with the swine he was not one of them—that he was the child of his noble father, that "his better self" was his true self and that in leaving that nightmare land he was returning home. In calling men to follow Him Jesus is not calling them to leave their own life to live one that is not their own, but from an abnormal and unsatisfactory life of wrong and unrest back to the wholesome, natural life of children of God. He only wants us to come to ourselves, for that will mean coming to Him.

FABLE OF THE WINE.

Story Which Points Its Lessons of the Harmful Effects of the Beverage.

With the origin of this fable the writer is unfamiliar. It was told recently by a skilled raconteur at a famous club in an eastern city whose members are alleged to be only too familiar both from experience and observation with the lesson it conveys.

A solitary traveler, so the fable runs, was crossing a desert waste. No living thing gladdened his sight. No cheerful sound broke the monotony of loneliness and silence. Suddenly the traveler's eye lighted when, at his feet, he discovered a tiny plant. Its presence seemed a harbinger of companionship and cheer. Carefully uprooting it from the sand, he carried it in his hand, ever regarding it with more and more interest. What was his delight to notice soon that, warmed in his enfolding palm, its stalk was vigorously shooting up and its rootlets were extending downward. Soon it outgrew the dimensions of his hand, and casting about for some means of carrying what he had come greatly to cherish, his eyes fell on the skull of a bird. In this he deposited the plant, whose growth continued to be more and more luxuriant. Its companionship, to his mind, was by this time almost human. He talked to it in happy reverie, sang to it, and found the tedium of the way greatly relieved by its shining green presence. Soon it outgrew the bird's skull, and lo! the head of a lion confronted him in the sands at his feet. Quickly he wrenched away the lower jaw and a commodious receptacle was ready for the spreading plant. This, too, soon proved inadequate, and the carcass of an ass next offered itself as best suited to its needs, the plant trailing over it in rich abundance.

Thus laden with his flourishing treasure in its extraordinary urn he arrived home, and when his wife learned its story, she said: "Plant it by the arbor where the honeysuckle died. So rapid is its growth that it will soon make of it a-bower of beauty." Her prophecy proved indeed true. After it had enwreathed the arbor, tiny, fragrant green blossoms appeared, followed in good season by great rich clusters of wine-red fruit.

"Why, it is a grape vine!" they said. "Of these beautiful clusters we will make wine to be drunk at the anniversary of our wedding, when we will give a banquet and invite many guests."

The evening came, the guests assembled, the distilled juice of the wondrous plant of the desert was brought forth to the smiling, eager company. The wineglasses were filled, and when they had drunk, the guests sang like birds; again and again the glasses were replenished when, horror of horrors! they roared like lions, and finally, so the legend pitifully concludes, they made asses of themselves.—Philadelphia Young People.

REFORM NOTES.

The men who can stop drinking when they get ready usually stop because there are no saloons in the grave.—Ram's Horn.

Judge Thomas F. Tipton, of Bloomington, Ill., says: "I have sent 300 men to the penitentiary, and 250 committed the offense from the use of liquor."

It is proposed that a national delegate convention to all religious denominations be held in Washington, D. C., in March, 1906 to consider methods of dealing with the liquor traffic. The Literary Digest says that since 1880 our alcoholic beverage bill has about doubled, going from 10.09 gallons per capita to 19.48. The alcoholic drinks cost last year $1,172,565,235, and coffee, tea and cocoa combined only $196,535,041.

It is a splendid fact that the precincts of the Washington capitol have been purified of the sale of liquor. There is now not a single bar anywhere in the vast building. Not many years ago every other room in this headquarters of the American legislature was a bar-room, and a great business was done by the bar-tenders. Last session only one such room remained, and the temperance reformers determined to sweep that clean of the liquor. And now they have succeeded. No senator or member of the house of representatives can purchase a drop of wine, or whisky, or beer in Uncle Sam's parliament house.

DON'T ALWAYS SEE SNAKES.

Men Attacked by Delirium Tremens Sometimes Have Visions at Which They Laugh.

The generally accepted belief that when a man is suffering from delirium tremens he sees snakes in his boots was dispelled by a hospital superintendent, who says "that he has observed several thousand cases. He declares that he never encountered one patient who imagined that he saw serpents, but that, on the contrary, the hallucinations of some of them are very happy. He said that it was customary in the local hospitals treating such cases to keep the men fresh from prolonged spells in a general room, where they are allowed to play cards or other games and engage in conversation with one another. For misery likes company.

He relates as an illustration of the freaks of men so deranged the case of a bartender who was happily playing cards in this general room, seemingly at peace with all the world, and, to the average person, perfectly free from liquor. The man suddenly began to tell a story, laughing heartily as he did so.

He said that he had just served two gentlemen with drinks of whisky and that when he turned to restore the bottle to the shelf his two guests disappeared as though by magic. He had turned but an instant, but the empty glasses were all that were left to indicate that anyone had been there. The bartender said that he leaned over the bar to see if the men had hidden there to avoid payment and that he could not see them, but that to satisfy himself he stepped around the bar to the front.

"Do you know," said he, relating the story, "that those fellows had shrunk to little bits of fellows not more than six inches tall, and they were engaged in a spirited argument over who should pay. As I walked up to them one of those little fellows leaped into my right pocket and the other jumped into my left trousers pocket, and, do you believe it, try as much as I would, I could not dislodge them!"

As the old habits of the tremens department of the hospital listened to this story, relates the superintendent, they looked knowingly at one another and quietly walked to a drainpipe passing through the room and vigorously rapped on it. It was a signal for the attendants below, who came in with handcuffs and removed the storyteller bartender to the "booby hatch" below, a name they have given to the padded cell in which recalcitrant men crazed from liquor are thrust for their own protection and for that of all concerned.

The hospital superintendent told me that that fellow was raving like a mad bull within half an hour, and that for three days they despaired of his life. He said that in their raving condition the victims believed that some one was pursuing them, and that to all intents and purposes they were maniacs, the only cure for which was sleep, induced by more liquor. He said, however, that the premonitory signs of approaching madness were always some queer speech, such as that of the bartender.—Pittsburg Post.

SOME EFFECTS OF ALCOHOL

London Doctor Explains Its Peculiar and Destructive Work.

Alcohol contains no nitrogen. It therefore can never and does never produce tissue. Its food value depends exclusively on its production of energy; and the first indisputable fact is that alcohol can be burnt within the body. It may therefore be a food, and in fevers it is probably the most valuable food that can be given to a patient, for in fever one cannot digest, and alcohol needs no digestion. It is, so to speak, a predigested food and passes unchanged to the tissues, there at once to be utilized. What are the facts in health?

It has been experimentally proved, not once but often, not in one country or continent, but in physiological laboratories all over the world, that in health only about one and a half ounces of absolute alcohol can be burnt within the body each day, this only obtaining when the substance is taken in sufficient dilution and at sufficiently numerous intervals. Approximately three ounces of whisky or brandy taken in four-hourly doses of half an ounce, well diluted, is all that the average man of normal temperature can utilize.

How does it come about that so many of us take alcohol to keep out the cold? Simply because the nerves of our sense of temperature end in the skin. Be our skin well supplied with warm blood we say we are warm, and vice versa. Furthermore, we normally lose heat and keep our temperature at the proper level by radiation from the skin. Any drug that dilates the blood vessels of the skin will therefore tend to make us feel warmer and be colder.

Infinitely more important than all these considerations, is the action of alcohol on the nervous system. I have no business at this moment with the records of insanity or crime, but it is worth while to dispel another popular fallacy as to the influence of alcohol on the mental processes.

Numberless tests have been carried out with such processes as adding up a column of figures, writing an account of a simple occurrence, discriminating between colors, and so forth. And the singular result, well established and confirmed, is that alcohol delays the rapidly and impairs the accuracy of these processes while producing the most convincing illusion of ease and rapidity. The calculator has a subjective impression of facility which the cold clock entirely fails to confirm.—Dr. Saleeby, in London Mail.

PLANTING THE FARM YARD.

How to Make Home Grounds Attractive and a Source of Never Ending Pleasure.

This is the time of year when those persons who wish to make improvements in their home surroundings have the matter most in their minds. It is a suitable time for looking into the future and making plans. The carefully considered preparation of plans is much more important than most people imagine. One of the greatest reasons why the home grounds on farms and in suburban neighborhoods are so unattractive is that the work is not planned. Enough money is spent in many cases—sometimes much more than is necessary. It is always best to decide in advance, as far as possible, what the arrangement of the grounds is to be, to put this down on paper, and to follow the plan through a series of years. We strongly recommend this undertaking to anyone who is seriously inclined to secure a good result.

In a great many places one sees farmyards upon which a considerable amount of work has been spent, but which are highly unattractive by reason of the fact that the materials are all jumbled into an unintelligible mess. Each shrub, each rose bush, and each flower bed has a separate history. Their different origins and different intentions show on their faces. They have no sympathy with one another. They are not striving together to make one harmonious composition, but each one is looking out for itself. They come from different places. The red rose was brought from the old home where mother used to have a garden. The althea was bought in a nursery at the time father visited at Geneva. The forsythia was a layer donated by a kind-hearted neighbor who has a large clump in her yard. The climbing rose (Baltimore Belle) was left by a fruit-tree agent in payment for his dinner. Each one of these separate articles when it came was stuck into the ground wherever there was a convenient opening.

This outline is the history of at least three-fourths of the farmyards which one sees. The general result is fairly well represented in figure 1. Here there are two rows of trees at right angles to one another, which are fine and shady and form the chief features of the place. However, they shade the house too much, allowing no outlook in any direction. There are some formal flower beds cut into the lawn just where the best grass ought to be. The walks and drives are stiff and straight. The shrubs stand about singly and at a distance from one another, as if they were afraid to associate with their neighbors. What little lawn there is, is on the other side of the road and behind the row of trees. It is useful only as a croquet ground. It is more than likely that in some spring there will be wires attached along the tree trunks, and the lawn will be used for a yard for penning up calves.

In figure 2 we have a rough sketch of the same piece of ground and the same house. The arrangement of materials on the grounds, however, follows a more agreeable plan. The roads and walks are gracefully curved—perhaps too much so; but at any rate they turn aside and leave room for a much larger stretch of grass on the left of the house. The trees are placed in scattered groups and the shrubbery is arranged in heavy masses. Almost anyone can see that the latter arrangement is preferable even in this cold pen and ink sketch. Could the two places be compared with the trees, shrubs and flower beds all complete, the difference would be much more striking.—Country Gentleman.

In selecting a young animal for breeding purposes, one with a gentle and tractable disposition should be chosen.—Midland Farmer.

WEEDS ARE BAD ENEMIES.

To Get Rid of Them Requires Hard Work from Beginning to End of the Season.

A North Dakota man who thinks weeds the worst enemy to be met with in the production of a garden writes the Farm, Stock and Home that they must be fought early, late and all the time. The best time to kill them is before they appear above ground. If the garden is large a good harrow is the best of weed killers. Corn and potatoes can be harrowed once a week from the time they are planted until four inches high. If the garden is small the iron hand rake and wheel hoe are indispensable. Plow all the garden ground as soon as you are ready to plant the first early vegetables; then once a week stir the unplanted ground, about an inch deep, with hoe or rake, and thus destroy the weeds while young and tender. It must be remembered that the secret of a good garden is constant and careful cultivation.

Last summer was a very trying one, no rain falling for over 60 days, so that most field crops were a failure; yet my garden was a good one; but the cultivator was kept going right along, and the weeds were kept down, so when at last the rain did come all vegetables made phenomenal growth. Cabbage especially delights in constant cultivation, the surface of the soil should be stirred at least once a week, and if twice a week it's all the better. Stir it even if not a weed is in sight, and the surface is fine and dry as ashes. It is impossible to keep weeds out of a garden here, the strong winter winds bringing seeds along with the drifting snow, even if none are allowed to mature on the premises, so that by spring the cleanest kept garden is well seeded to weeds, and we must fight them from the start.

TREE PLANTING IN BLOCKS.

Important Facts Clearly Established by Recent Scientific Tests in Horticulture.

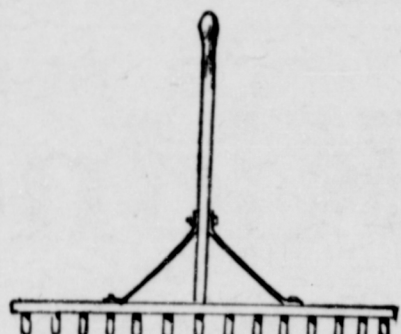

It is not advisable to plant any one variety of apples, pears or plums in blocks, even of a hundred, unless there are other varieties on all sides of the block. Within comparatively recent years it has been discovered that many of our varieties of the above mentioned fruit are largely infertile to their own pollen, some more so than others. This kind of planting has caused many a good orchard to be infertile, without the owner even suspecting the true cause.

It was first found that plums required to be cross-pollinated to insure a harvest. Then some one discovered that the Kiefer pear was a very uncertain quantity without some other varieties near it. The investigation was continued, with the result that several other varieties of pears were found to be in need of cross-fertilization. At last the scientists made some elaborate experiments to determine to what extent the apple came under the same laws as to pollination. To the surprise of almost everyone, it was proved that very few of our varieties of apples do as well fertilized by their own pollen, as by the pollen of another variety, and some of the varieties are found to be almost sterile when fertilized by the pollen of that variety. It is, therefore, best to set out apple, plum and pear trees that the pollen of one variety may be used on another variety. This will greatly increase the probability of a crop.—Farmer's Review.

PLANTING OF ONION SETS.

A Method That Enables One to Accomplish a Great Deal in a Short Space of Time.

and a half inches thick, two and a half inches broad and four feet long, to which a well-braced handle is attached. The teeth should project about three inches. Lay on marked row, pressing slightly with the foot. In each hole thus made, deposit an onion set. Then run rake that is attached to wheel-hoe down row and the work is completed. This insures rapid and effective work, enabling one to accomplish twice as much in a given time as by the usual method.—H. B. Mitchell, in Farm and Home.

Transplanting in the Night.
In Nature there is a practical arrangement of general interest on the transplanting of plants in full foliage in the night, written by Prof. Maumene, and gives the result of some experiments of M. Roualt. It is customary to transplant deciduous trees in the fall or winter. Roualt has found that trees may be transplanted in full foliage in May or June, with little or no injury, provided the process is carried on at night. This has been demonstrated to the entire satisfaction of some of the most prominent horticulturists of France.

CAUSE OF EDUCATION.

Lord Strathcona has given $20,000 to Manitoba university to expend in its scientific work.

David Sears, of Boston, a Harvard graduate of 1847, has given $250,000 to the university.

The Yale corporation is considering raising the tuition of undergraduate students. It has been proposed to add $10 to the tuition bill, making it $165 instead of $155 as at present. A few years ago it was raised from $125 to $155. The addition of the extra $10 would give the university $11,000 a year more for running expenses.

By the death of Mrs. Henry Farnam, who passed away not long ago, Yale will receive a permanent home for its president. According to the terms of the will of the late Henry Farnam, his handsome residence in New Haven is to go to the university upon the death of his widow and his son, Prof. Henry W. Farnam, to be used as the home of the president. The home is filled with art treasures which will also pass to the university. The gift is valued at $250,000.

A New Orleans newspaper donated a fund to be used annually in bestowing a prize upon the person who has done the city the greatest service. This year the prize, a superb loving cup, went to Miss Sophia Wright, who fifteen years ago started a free night school for those whose daily employment barred them from the public schools. When Miss Wright opened her school two scholars applied, and to day there are 1,500 in attendance, while only lack of room prevents an even larger number of pupils.

Marvin Shearer, a one armed man of Akron, O., has made a clock which records hours in different cities, registers changes in temperature and humidity, and shows historical pictures.

Gov. Brodie, of Arizona, recently received a telegram from one of the rough riders whose fighting blood is still in circulation. The telegram was as follows: "Am going to the Orient. Which would you advise, Russia or Japan?" The governor in order to head off a soldier of fortune hurriedly replied: "Better stay in the United States; it's better than either."

Henry Labochere, that stormy petrel of British journalism, has just fought his 44th action for libel and he lost, being condemned to pay $5,000 damages for saying that a certain physician was not duly qualified and that he was a quack. This is the heaviest verdict ever brought against the editor of Truth, but as he is a very rich man it is possible he thinks the fun worth the money.

STATE NEWS HAPPENINGS.

REPUBLICAN CONVENTION.

Threatened Contests Between Bradley and Yerkes Did Not Take Place.

Louisville, Ky., May 4.—The threatened contest between former Gov. W. O. Bradley and Commissioner of Internal Revenue John W. Yerkes, for the control of the republican state and central committee failed to materialize at the convention Tuesday. In two speeches which won him ovations Mr. Bradley declared for harmony. He moved that the rules and order of business be suspended before the report of the committee on credentials should be announced and that Mr. Yerkes, the temporary chairman, be unanimously declared permanent chairman. The same motion applied to the retention of Samuel J. Roberts and Young E. Allison as permanent secretaries. The motion was carried unanimously after it had been held up for some time by former Congressman John D. White, who was finally howled down. The platform adopted endorsed the administration of President Roosevelt, "which, following as it has done the policy of William McKinley, has continued with unabated force the marvelous prosperity with which our country has been blessed since the return of the republican party to power in 1897."

Richard P. Ernest, of Covington, and George M. Long, of Leitchfield, were nominated by acclamation to serve with Mr. Bradley, leaving one more delegate at large to be elected.

The practice of previous state conventions having been to name a Negro delegate at large, the remaining position on the delegation was contested for by several of that race. Dr. E. E. Underwood, colored, of Frankfort, was nominated.

Louisville, Ky., May 5.—The new republican state central committee organized Wednesday morning by electing R. P. Ernest, of Covington, chairman; George W. Welsh, of Danville, vice chairman, and Clint McClarty, of Louisville, treasurer. The election of a secretary was postponed. C. M. Barnett retired as chairman, after eight years' service.

Frankfort, Ky., May 6.—In the court of appeals Thursday, when the case of Jett and White versus the Commonwealth was called, Judge Hazelrigg, attorney for Curtis Jett, dismissed the appeal as to Jett, and the appeal of White was argued by A. F. Byrd for the state and J. M. Hazelrigg for White. Jett and White were tried together and both given life sentences for the assassination of James B. Marcum. Later Curt Jett was tried and given a death sentence for the murder of young Cockrell. The appeal from the death sentence will be argued Friday. This move means that Jett is willing to take the life sentence and risk getting a new trial for the murder of Cockrell.

JAMES HOWARD.

Until June 10 Given Him to File Petition For Rehearing.

Frankfort, Ky., May 7.—The court of appeals Friday granted James Howard additional time till June 10 to file his petition for rehearing. His life sentence for killing Gov. Goebel having been affirmed. W. M. Smith, the attorney for Howard, asked 30 days additional time and stated that the reason for asking the time was to give Howard a chance to raise enough money to carry his case to the United States supreme court. Chief Justice Burnham stated that if the court gave 30 days asked that it would carry the case over to the next term, which was contrary to all former rulings of the court in criminal cases.

Belong to Commonwealth Attorney.

The members of the company have been buying on the breaks for a long time, and are said to be especially interested in foreign business. The price paid for the warehouse is about $30,000. It has been under lease to the trust, which would probably have purchased it, but the new company stole a march.

COL. M. A. COCHRAN DEAD.

Former Commandant at Fort Thomas Passed Away in Florida.

Newport, Ky., May 5.—Disappointment because illness prevented his serving at the front, and grief over the death of his wife and son within a year, are believed to have been partly responsible for the death of Col. Melville Augustus Cochran, former commandant at Fort Thomas, Ky., who passed away at Jacksonville, Fla., Tuesday night, according to a dispatch. Had he lived a few months longer friends are confident he would have been honored by promotion to the rank of brigadier general, as allowed under a bill passed by the late congress.

THE FINANCES OF RUSSIA.

In Recent Years the Supply of Loanable Money Has Become Scarce and Dear.

Russia's position is like that of a nobleman who has a large but utterly neglected estate and a house that is falling about his ears, who is deeply in debt, who pays one lender by borrowing from another, who sees his debts steadily mounting up toward the point at which ruin becomes unavoidable and who desperately makes the most fantastic attempts at making money, hoping to disentangle himself, says O. Eltzbacher, in the Nineteenth Century. One of Russia's strange expedients for getting money was lately revealed. According to its extremely well-informed Peking correspondent, Russia claimed, after the Boxer rising, from China, an indemnity of $17,900,000, on the ground that she kept 179,000 soldiers in China at an expense of $100 each. According to the Peking correspondent of the Times she kept in reality only 50,000 in China.

Of late years the supply of loanable money has for various reasons become scarce and dear in the various money centers of the world, and it would have been extremely difficult for Russia to provide for her ordinary peace expenditure, as she would not easily have been able to obtain these loans without which she can apparently not make both ends meet. Therefore it is not easy to see how Russia will be able to raise the funds necessary for carrying on the Japanese war, which will probably prove exceedingly costly, and how she will meet her current obligations unless she should abandon her overambitious policy, which is beyond her financial strength, and disband her army and navy. However, such an event seems hardly likely.

Many of the best observers have for a long time past been of opinion that Russia is financially unable to conduct a great war. However, lack of money has never prevented a nation from going to war, for it may make up for its war expenses by repudiating its public debt. Whether Russia will meet her obligations in full remains to be seen. If she should be forced to repudiate or to compound with her foreign creditors, either because of the costliness of the present war or because the international money market can no longer supply Russia's insatiable financial requirements, it will be an evil day for the French nation, which has lent to Russia more than $300,000,000.

Russia's financial collapse would probably mean the break-up of the dual alliance, for in the first place the thrifty Frenchman is exceedingly sensitive when his pocket is touched and in the second place Russia would have proved herself financially unable to be an efficient ally to France in case of war. Ample funds are, after all, sine qua non of war which are as indispensable as are armies and fleets.

INDIANS OF ALL COLORS.

Negroes Predominate in Muskogee, Whites Come Next and Reds Are Almost Rareties.

The first impression one gets of Muskogee, the largest and most important town in Indian territory, is that of a southern city with a large negro population. The negro predominates, the whites come in next and the reds are often pointed out as exceptions, one might almost say rarities. And yet, says the Kansas City Journal, legally and technically in Muskogee a large proportion of these negroes and white men are Indians and are called such; and this is true throughout the Creek and Muskogee nation. The title Indian includes Indians by blood, Indians by intermarriage and freedmen.

The freedmen are the slaves who were liberated during the civil war, or their descendants. They were admitted to full citizenship in the Creek nation and are entitled to share in the distribution of the lands and moneys of the tribe. They can vote for the tribal officers and are eligible to the tribal offices. The Creek council, consisting of the house of kings and the house of warriors, is in part made up of negroes.

Freedmen, however, have not been admitted to citizenship in the two southern tribes, the Choctaws and the Chickasaws, but the United States government proposes to give them 40 acres of land apiece, but it must reimburse these two nations for the lands thus presented by a generous government to those who were formerly in bondage to the government's wards—the Indians.

Intermarriage between the full-blood Indians and the freedmen has been frequent and extended among the Creeks; somewhat less so among the Seminoles, and practically unknown among the Choctaws and Chickasaws. The existence of these negroes in such numbers as in the Creek nation and under the circumstances creates a negro problem of great importance and greater difficulty.

Pattern Right at Hand.

"I am supposed to die of a broken heart," said the unmanageable actress. "Now, how am I to know how a person with a broken heart behaves?" "I'll tell you what to do," answered the plain-spoken manager. "You study the author of this play after he sees your first performance of it." — Stray Stories.

Doctored Himself.

A woman died in St. Leonards, England, recently, of self-doctoring, as she disliked doctors. A witness at the inquest testified that deceased had been known to take at one time, just before going to bed, nine compound rhubarb pills, several mixtures, four tablespoonfuls of senna, three tablespoonfuls of castor oil and a quantity of magnesia.

THE LITTLE WORDS.

You'd be surprised, I'm sure, to know how far a little word can go. How many miles it runs away. Up hill and down, a single day. How many angry hearts it wakes. How many pleasant friends it makes. What very wise things it can tell. What very simple ones, as well. How very busy, brave and true. How very false and lazy, too. So, take good care before that word. By anybody else is heard. That it shall truly worthy be. To join a happy company. Of helpful words, that march with grace. And bear sweet sunshine in the face. —Frank Walcott Hutt, in Youth's Companion.

PRANKS OF A MONKEY PET.

Acted as Laundress and Performed the Duties of Assistant to the Family Cook.

Monkeys are the most imitative of all the lower animals, and sometimes this propensity for imitating the doings of their betters gets them into rare mischief, as the following experience of a London lad with a pet monkey, whose inquisitive and imitative nature made him the pest of the neighborhood, bears amusing testimony.

One day this monkey observed the maid washing the lace of her mistress. He very obligingly offered to help her, but was angrily repulsed by the maid. The monkey stopped for a few minutes, at a safe distance, to give the maid a well deserved scolding for her rudeness, and then started out evidently intent on finding other laundry work to do. The result of his sudden intrusion into the field of John Chinaman's labors can best be told in the lady's own words:

"Unfortunately," she says, "the windows of my room were invitingly open, and he entered with the idea of the washing still fresh in his head. He soon discovered two small drawers containing lace, ribbons and handkerchiefs. Ah, here was the washing all ready to his hands! In a moment all of these articles were out of the drawers and into a foot pan, together with all the soap and water that happened to be in my room, and the laundering began. He must have washed away with great vigor, for when I returned to my room after an absence of an hour or so, I found him busily spreading out to dry the torn and disfigured remnants of my lace, ribbons and handkerchiefs. He was well aware that he had done wrong. Without my speaking to him he made off the moment he saw me, going very quickly and hiding himself in the case of the kitchen clock in his own home."

Another time this same monkey saw the cook at work preparing partridges for dinner. This looked like an amusing and interesting operation, and he determined forthwith to put it to the test. There were no more partridges; but ah, yes, his mistress had some pet bantam fowls! Doubtless one of them would do equally well. At the first opportunity he hurried into the yard, seized one of the hens, quickly returned to the kitchen and then coolly began pulling out the feathers, just as he had seen the cook do, utterly regardless of the squawking protests of the poor bantam. The servants heard the noise and hurried to the kitchen, but they found the hen in such a pitiful condition that they were obliged to kill her. —N. Y. Herald.

ROMPED WITH HIS SHADOW.

Jack Had a Lot of Fun with a Strange Puppy That Came Whenever the Sun Shone.

Jack was a little white puppy; he had been carried away from his mother to serve as a playmate for a little boy. The little boy was at the seashore, so Jack was very lonesome. "I wish I had some one to play with. Oh, I do wish somebody would come and play with me," he said, as the maid put him out in the back yard for a run. It was a clear, sunny day, and Jack soon noticed a little black puppy capering along beside him. It was really his shadow, but Jack thought it was another puppy. "Let's run a race," he barked, and the shadow bobbed and nodded. Off they went; 'round the garden and 'round the garden, but Jack could never get one step ahead of the little black shadow puppy. They tried digging in the flower bed to see if anybody had buried bones there. The little black puppy stood right beside Jack and seemed to dig just as he did. They didn't find any bones, but they had a great deal of fun, and once when they found a scrap of meat that cook had thrown out of the window the black puppy's nose went down to it just the same as Snowball's, but Snowball was sure he never took a bite, for it was all there for the little white dog to eat.

When the play time was over John, who took care of the horses, came to the door and whistled. The black puppy ran right beside Jack, as if he had been called, too. "Sure, your little master has come," John said, picking up the puppy and carrying him into the house.

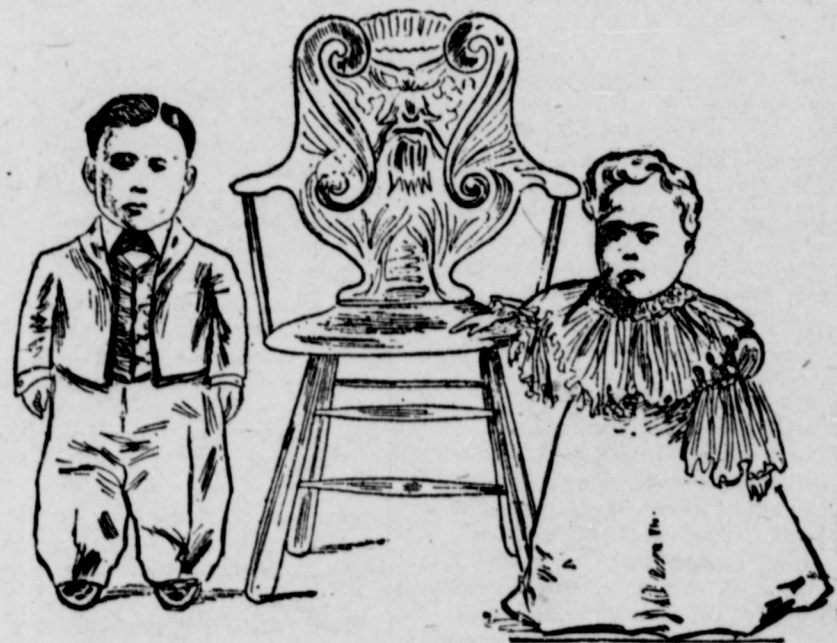

Jack was glad to see the little boy to whom he was to belong, and you may be sure the little boy was glad to see him, but the puppy felt grieved when he found that the little black dog had not come in the house.

He did not come in that day, and he never came. Jack found that if he wanted to have a romp with his shadow he must go out into the sunlight. And so you will find it, too. —St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

What Makes Papa Cross?

A minister had been suffering from a severe attack of sciatica, which had worked upon his nerves, making him somewhat impatient and fretful. "What makes papa so cross?" wondering inquired his little daughter. Her mother explained the cause of the trouble, adding: "We must be very patient and kind with poor papa. He is suffering very much with that sciatic nerve." The little one was thoughtful for a moment, then she solemnly remarked: "Mamma, when I grow up I will never marry a man with a sciatic nerve." —Our Young People.

Juan and Martina de la Cruz: The Smallest People in the World

JUAN and Martina de la Cruz, a brother and sister, were the second and third children in a Filipino family of eight. Their elder brother, living in Manila, is 36 years old, 5 feet 7 inches high, and weighs 138 pounds. Martina, the next eldest, is 31 years old and 27 inches high. Juan, the next in age, is 29 years old and 29 inches high. Their parents and the five youngest children, all of whom are dead, were of average height. Brother and sister are respectively seven and nine inches smaller than Gen. Tom Thumb. Juan has been married and is the father of a boy, eight years old. He is as large as any child of that age in the islands. His wife, who was a Filipino of normal size, died three years ago. The midget's read and write and perform arithmetical problems in the Visayan tongue, speak the Tagalog lingo, besides Spanish and some English. Even in their own country they were regarded as "freaks," in the showman's parlance, and spent several years giving exhibitions of native and Spanish dances and the acrobatic feats of the southern tribes. About a year ago they went to Manila, where they made their appearance at the American theaters before the soldiery of the United States. Soon after their arrival they were secured for the Philippine exhibit at the St. Louis world's fair. They were brought to the United States a few weeks ago, in advance of the fair, that they might become acclimated and accustomed to the food and water of this country. They are spending the interval before the opening of the exposition in California.

Mr. Joseph Pominville, of Stillwater, Minn., after having spent over $2,000 with the best doctors for stomach trouble, without relief, was advised by his druggist, Mr. Alex. Richard to try a box of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. He did so, and is a well man today. If troubled with indigestion, bad taste in the mouth, lack of appetite or constipation, give these Tablets a trial, and you are certain to be more than pleased with the result. For sale at 25 cents per box by S. E. Welch, Jr., druggist.

Good Advice.

Is to tell your neighbors to use Paracamp for Cold in the Head or Chest. It relieves Colds, Catarrh and Sore Throat quicker than any other known remedy, because it opens the pores, induces perspiration and removes congestion. It drives away that "stopped up" feeling and draws out all fever and inflammation. Try it. It won't take a minute, and it will relieve you in less time.

RESULTS COUNT

What a carriage does—how it rides—the satisfaction it gives the buyer—how it wears—how it looks after years—these are the things that count. And they are the things that guide us always in the buying of our vehicles.

First we consider WEAR—how the vehicle is built—the kind and temper of the springs—the material in the wheels, the life of the vehicle—the trimmings of the seats, backs and tops—the system of painting used.

Then we look for STYLE—style and shape—style in finish—style in appearance.

If you want a stylish, long-wearing, and thoroughly satisfactory vehicle, no matter what kind, you'll find it in our repository.
